TRIUM Global Executive MBA ranks 2nd worldwide in the Financial Times

Paris, New York, London– October 24th, 2011: The TRIUM Global Executive MBA Program has been ranked 2nd in the world (100 programs are listed) by the Financial Times’ annual ranking of Executive MBA programs.

Each year, the Financial Times’ survey evaluates Executive MBA programs offered by business schools from all over the world. The study assesses the career progress of alumni three years after program completion, the academic excellence of the faculty, as well as the programs’ international scope.

Marking its 10-year anniversary, TRIUM ranked first in the world for “Aims Achieved,” a criteria that measures the extent to which alumni fulfilled their most important goals or reasons for pursuing an EMBA. It also came first in "Work Experience", which measures the previous experience of EMBA participants by examining the seniority of positions held, the number of years in each position, the size of the company, and any international work experience prior to starting the EMBA.

According to Dean Peter Henry of NYU Stern School of Business, “Our TRIUM alliance equips senior executives to create value for their organizations in a world linked by economic, social and political forces.”

Judith Rees, Director of the London School of Economics and Political Science, added: "TRIUM is an international success because its participants learn to think internationally and to combine rigorous academic standards with the drive and passion of their business lives as well as to address the economic, political and social contexts within which all business must operate. These are strengths that continue to be widely recognised and appreciated."

Dean Bernard Ramanantsoa of HEC Paris, also commented, saying: “Blending the complementary strengths of three premier universities, the TRIUM program builds a global network of successful and responsible business leaders. Since it began ten years ago, the value of the TRIUM program has been proven by the careers of our alumni, a success which is reflected by our ranking as 1st in the world for ‘Aims Achieved.’”
TRIUM, the leading Global Executive MBA program for senior-level global executives and managers, welcomed its 1st class in September 2001. It owes its success to the complementary expertise of each of its 3 prestigious institutions and to the 5 training locations it offers across the world. In 10 years, 500 managers have graduated. Originating from more than 70 countries, some of them work for large companies, others work in family businesses or are even entrepreneurs, working in fields as varied as governmental organisations, law or NGOs.

The London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE) is one of the foremost social science universities in the world. It is a specialist university with an international intake and a global reach. Its research and teaching spans the full breadth of the social sciences, from economics, politics and law to sociology, anthropology, accounting and finance and, as the 2008 Research Assessment Exercise found, it has the highest percentage of world-leading research of any university in the UK. Founded in 1895 by Beatrice and Sidney Webb, LSE has an outstanding reputation for academic excellence. Fifteen Nobel Prize winners in economics, literature and peace have been either LSE staff or alumni. The School has just under 90,000 registered alumni. As of February 2009, around 32 past or present heads of state have studied or taught at LSE, and 28 members of the British House of Commons and 42 members of the House of Lords have either studied or taught at LSE.
